

SOLIDARITEE

SOLIDARITEE IN THE PRESS

Cambridge University Charity Fashion Show teams up with SolidariTee

"Part of the way that SolidariTee works is by showing support for a cause through what you're wearing. Action can't end there, and it doesn't with SolidariTee, but it's a good place to start raising awareness."

- Varsity, 13th November 2018

https://www.varsity.co.uk/fashion/16533?utm_source=feedburner&utm_medium=feed&utm_campaign=Feed%3A+varsity%2Frss+%28Varsity+Online+RSS%29

Refuge from the Law

"Those awaiting registration have begun publicly to question whether the services in place to assist them truly exist, or whether they are in fact an elaborate joke orchestrated by their supposed helpers"

- Aljumburiya.net, 18th July 2018

<https://www.aljumburiya.net/en/content/refuge-law>

SolidariTee: Student activism for global issues

"The fundraising concept isn't novel but it certainly is unique: the design on this year's T-shirts comes from a meeting between an Afghan man and an Advocates lawyer in Chios. It's a map of his life; where he was born, where he trained as an army officer, where he was captured by the Taliban. It's personal, as everything referring to such a horrific humanitarian crisis should be."

- Cherwell (Oxford), 3rd December 2017

<http://cherwell.org/2017/12/03/solidaritee-student-activism-for-global-issues/>

November 24th - National SolidariTee day!

"Students can buy a T-shirt for £10, all of which goes directly to the refugees. It is a perfect way to know that your charity donation is making a tangible difference."

- The Sphynx, 23rd November 2017

<https://www.thesphynx.co.uk/2017/11/november-24th-national-solidaritee-day/>

Oxford students join national campaign of SolidariTee for refugees

"It's not just a fundraiser: The idea behind the t-shirts is one of silent demonstration. Aside for the ongoing photo campaign on social media, on the 24th of November this year students at universities all across the country—Edinburgh, Durham, Liverpool, Cambridge, Oxford, Imperial, UCL and Exeter to name just a few—will show the world that refugees are welcome in the UK. MPs such as Caroline Lucas, Ian Murray, Tavish Scott and our very own Anneliese Dodds have donned a shirt and pledged their support."

- The Tab Oxford, 17th November 2017

<https://thetab.com/uk/oxford/2017/11/15/oxford-students-join-national-campaign-solidaritee-refugees-28379#>

Meet SolidariTee, the student refugee campaign

"Amid European state nationalism and stringent control over inter-state movement of people, the SolidariTee campaign demonstrates the capacity for today's youth to reach out across borders and support our fellow people."

- Student Newspaper (Edinburgh), 9th November 2014

<http://www.studentnewspaper.org/meet-solidaritee-the-student-refugee-campaign/>

T-shirt campaign raises money for refugees

"Legal aid is ultimately the only way that a refugee is going to be able to start their new life. This is evidenced by the fact that Advocates Abroad has a 100% success rate for July and August 2017: all the refugees they worked with were granted international protection and have been able to move out of the camp and onto the mainland."

- Varsity (Cambridge), 26th October 2017

<https://www.varsity.co.uk/news/13873>

Cambridge students campaign for refugees goes national

"Tiara says, "We talk a lot about how divided society is becoming, so the idea of students from all around the country uniting around one message was a really exciting prospect.""

- The Tab Cambridge, 20th August 2017

<https://thetab.com/uk/cambridge/2017/08/20/cambridge-students-campaign-for-refugees-goes-national-97149>

Student's t-shirts to raise money for refugees

"People seemed to have two main thoughts; firstly, that this was suprapolitical – that this was something that all people should be invested in, and secondly, that they wanted to do something. Solidarity wasn't enough. So I thought of a way to combine both a show of support and something more practical, and came up with the idea of selling t-shirts."

- Varsity (Cambridge), 17th February 2017

<https://thetab.com/uk/cambridge/2017/08/20/cambridge-students-campaign-for-refugees-goes-national-97149>